

THE OFFICIAL TIME TRAVEL PLANNING CALENDAR 1700-2069

Compiled by Craig W. Turner

The Official Time Travel Planning Calendar 1700-2069 is designed to be a resource for time travel writers. One of the most confusing and abstract concepts that writers have taken on, time travel is filled with enough loops, twists and multiple perspectives that I found benefit in a reference to serve as a reminder for little details that can be easily overlooked.

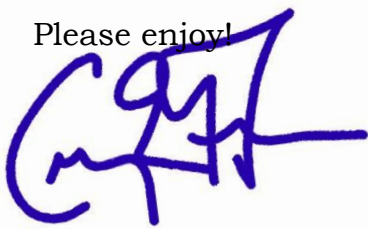

For instance, if your characters plan to spend any time in the past beyond an in-and-out appearance, it's important to make sure they're not mixing it up with business folks or walking into a store on a Sunday. Businesses being open on Sundays are a relatively new thing in the grand scheme of history.

All time travelers toy with the notion of placing a bet on the big game and then returning to the present to reap the fortunes. Just don't let your characters make their millions at the Super Bowl or the Kentucky Derby on a Wednesday afternoon.

If your hero lands in the past, but is using his or her knowledge of the future to sneak into a major metropolis to stop a crime or rescue people from a disaster, if it's Monday-through-Friday at 9 a.m. or 5 p.m. there'd better be some traffic. Interestingly, the term rush hour was first used in 1888 (Source: www.etymonline.com), so you have to go back a bit to avoid it!

Just some examples, but I hope my fellow writers find this little guide helpful. I will tell you that the desire to put it together came from personal experience – editing my own time travel manuscripts to find that I'd ignored weekends as my characters gallivanted around the past. It became a useful tool that I thought I'd share.

Please enjoy!

TIME TRAVEL RULES

There are some standard rules for time travel that in books and movies seem to be impossible to follow. That being said, it is important that the time traveler at least attempt to maintain some degree of self-discipline, so as to not intentionally or unintentionally create permanent damage to his or her own reality. Here are some general rules:

1. Do not interact with another version of yourself.
2. Do not interact with another version of someone you know, particularly family.
3. Do not time travel to fix something you're currently unhappy with in your life.
4. Do not try to influence your significant other to meet you sooner than you actually met to avoid the jerk that he/she went out with before you met.
5. Do not bring modern or future technology into the past.
6. If you're going to destroy technology from the future that somehow ended up in the present or past, destroy it completely so scientists can't use it to create the technology in the first place.
7. If you're returning to the future, leave some time in between when you left so your two selves don't coincide.
8. Don't try to warn people of upcoming world events – it will only result in a fate somewhere between being institutionalized and burned at the stake.

This image shows a blank sheet of white paper with horizontal ruling lines. The lines are evenly spaced and run across the width of the page. There are no margins, text, or other markings on the paper.
